The Department of Ethnocultural Policy and the Chair in International Cultural Studies at the Institute of Intercultural Studies at the Jagiellonian University are pleased to invite you to the international conference entitled:

Multiculturalism - a social fact or a failed political project?

which will be held on May 22nd, 2017
in Villa Decius in Krakow

Idea

An issue of multiculturalism has become a part of the debate on 'liquid modernity', to use the term established by Zygmunt Bauman, and thus this social phenomenon has been and continues to be re-examined from the viewpoints of often opposing perspectives. Multiculturalism as an on going process has therefore its supporters and opponents, whose expressed views become increasingly explicit. The experience of European countries related to ineffective control over the influx of asylum seekers from the Middle East - in conjunction with the lack of a clear vision on immigration policy in particular countries and the whole European Union - are causing a specific socio-political results. One of those is growing social unwillingness to support an open border policy between EU countries on the one hand and a compliance given to rise of right wing political parties on the other. Social attitudes that are open to diversity are pushed back by xenophobia motivated ethnic or even racial exclusion. This trend supports growing instability of the system, revealing movements contesting the pattern of competitive political process in European democracies.

At the bottom of this dynamic multicultural phenomenon we find the model of intercultural relations that seems to be equally dynamic. This model should be managed by stable and approved legal regulations and ought to be derived from the mutual cultural openness. This theoretical assumption, however, is extremely difficult from the practical point of view even impossible to comprehend by the supporters of xenophobic views. The forthcoming months will show if xenophobic attitudes will prevail in Europe.
